THEY CALL AFRICA THE DARK CONTINENT. BUT NYOKA, THE JUNGLE GIRL, NEVER KNEW HOW DARK IT COULD BE UNTIL SHE MET WOLFE, THE LAST OF THE SLAVERS!

THEY WILL CAPTURE YOU, WOLFE! AND I WILL HELP THEM! ALL THESE MEN WERE FORCED TO WORK HERE. YOU MUST RELEASE THEM!

THE JUNGLE WAS PEACEFUL AT THE TIME NYOKA PLANNED A TRIP INTO A LITTLE KNOWN PART OF THE JUNGLE. DARAGA, A NATIVE GUIDE, AGREED TO SHOW HER A FAINT TRAIL HE KNEW...

DARAGA IS LONG OVERDUE! THIS IS UNUSUAL FOR HIM! I WONDER IF HE IS ILL. I'D BETTER GO TO THE VILLAGE AND SEE!

DARAGA LEFT MANY HOURS AGO TO MEET NYOKA! PERHAPS HE TOO HAS VANISHED LIKE THE OTHERS!

OTHERS? YOU MEAN MEN HAVE DISAPPEARED?

NYOKA

"Na-gut-a's Present."

Major Henri Dubois was seated in a large comfortable chair on the lawn of his house in Tourville, Belgian Congo. The thermometer had long since refused to register the degrees of heat. A good guess at that moment would have put the temperature at about one hundred and thirty five degrees.

"Do not let the heat bother you," Major Dubois said to his guest. "Just ignore the temperature and make up your mind that you feel cool and comfortable!"

Frank Moore couldn't help laughing at that last remark. Beads of perspiration had collected on his forehead and were starting to drip down his cheeks. He took a large white handkerchief from his pocket and quickly dried his forehead.

"Your advice is good provided I can also keep an ice bag on my head," he answered. "You will forgive me if I come to the point of our meeting. Will you give me permission to enter the jungle?"

The major looked for a moment to the west where the great Tanara jungle started. Many people had gone into it and for different reasons:

"Last year they wanted to make a picture with a real authentic jungle background. Believe me when I say they could have done a better and cheaper job in your American Hollywood. The year before that an artist wanted to go into the jungle and paint pictures. Alas he didn't know much about art. Then there were the men who wanted to look for gold in the jungle. You must have a reason. And it should be a good one or otherwise I will refuse you permission. You must understand we want the natives to live their lives without being bothered by outsiders."

"Dr. Herman Kempt was my brother-in-law," explained the young American. "Two years ago his plane smashed and hit the Oroco river at the other side of the Tanara jungle. He was carrying with him the results of his years of research and experimentation. There is reason to believe that the material was in a special container. The plane began to lose altitude inside the jungle area. Equipment and baggage were thrown overboard. Perhaps the container is somewhere in the jungle. If we could find it, then the data would be very helpful. In fact it would save the Kempt Institute of Research a lot of hard work trying to rediscover what my brother-in-law already found."

"He was a wonderful man," admitted the major. "Someday we will conquer all of the diseases in Africa. You have my permission to go into the jungle. First you will have to be equipped. The man to see is Pierre Raschine. Then you will need a capable guide. This Pierre Raschine knows every inch of the jungle. The natives trust him which is very important. I shall give you a note of introduction to him."

There was no sign on the large store run by Pierre Raschine. Everybody in Tourville knew the owner. His flowing white beard was something of a landmark. Youngsters spotting the beard at a distance would remark, "There is Pierre." He always carried candies in his pockets for the young children. He looked at the American.

"I can outfit you and guide you into the jungle. We will have to travel by dugout until we reach the settlement of the Druasa people. But I do not wish to make any promise that I am unable to keep. It is my opinion that you will find nothing of the equipment and baggage thrown from the plane. The jungle area on the west side of Oroco river is very dense. The material would land on the top of tall trees and vines and remain there. Even if you had a helicopter and could skim the top of the jungle, it would be of no help to you. The terrific windstorms and rainstorms we have here would probably force the material downward so that it could not be seen. If you think one in a million is chance enough then let us go."

Into a hand-carved dugout the baggage and supplies were piled. Pierre Raschine sat next to the young American. Nine powerfully built natives were the paddles. Rhythmically they hit the water and kept the boat going at a fast pace. Now and then a crocodile would gaze at the intruders.

"There are many thousands of them in Oroco river," explained the Frenchman. "If the boat should capsize, let us say the result would be fatal. But do not fear. These natives are experts at handling their boats in this water."

At nightfall they beached the boat on the shore. A fire was built and Pierre Raschine cooked supper for the American.

"It really is peaceful in the jungle," said the Frenchman. "There are many animals inside. But you leave them alone and they will leave you alone. The jungle plants and the fish could keep you alive and healthy."

"But I would miss a nice juicy steak," grinned Frank Moore. "I never thought the moon above the jungle river could be so beautiful." The natives chanted a song and soon the young American was in dreamland. He awoke in the morning and had a hearty breakfast. They continued their journey by boat. At the end of three days they arrived at their destination. The Druasa people were tall and well built. Their chief was an old man with the peculiar name of Mok-climb-higher.

"Dr. Saville, the explorer, gave him that name," explained Pierre Raschine. "He can climb a tree better than any other person. He will go with us into the jungle. If we spot an object, you can be certain he will get it for us."

The chief and half a dozen natives of the Druasa people formed a small searching party. The jungle was thick with overgrown vines at this time of the year. The leading native held a large, powerful, and thick blade which he swung up and down and thus cut a path through the jungle. It was while walking slowly that a monkey jumped from a branch upon Frank Moore's shoulders.

"Just ignore him," suggested Pierre Raschine. "If you throw him off he will return with many of his relatives."

Finally the monkey reached for a branch and remained there. He wagged his tail as though to acknowledge the free ride he had. The natives looked in all directions and even upon the ground. They could find nothing connected with the destroyed plane.

"Anytime you want to return, just say the word," advised the Frenchman. "The natives are paid up to the end of the month. Don't worry about food. We can live on the jungle."

During the next eleven days the young American tasted some unknown foods which he enjoyed. However he realized their task was like looking for a needle in a haystack.

"We might as well return," he said sadly. "At least I did try to find the material."

When they returned to the native village, the rowers of the boat had some bad news for Pierre Raschine which he in turn told to his American friend.

"We have to wait here another week. Too many crocodiles, and in such numbers they would even dare to attack a boat."

It was the day before they were scheduled to leave that the accident occurred. Chief Mok-climb-higher had a six year old son called Nagut-a. The youngster was like a shadow; he followed the American everywhere. On that morning, Frank Moore was standing near a log which protruded out into the river. The youngster ran and took a leap. He missed the log and plunged into the water. The fast stream started to carry him out. Crocodiles on the other shore headed for the water. Without hesitation the young American jumped into the river and swam for the boy. The Frenchman dashed for his rifle and started to pump bullets ahead of the swimmer to keep the crocodiles away. Natives ran for spears and threw them at the crocodiles. The American reached shore just a few feet ahead of an enterprising crocodile.

"Magnificent," shouted the Frenchman. "If I did not see it with my own eyes I would not believe it."

The chief insisted on holding a great feast that night. In the morning before they left, the grateful chief gave the savior of his son many presents. Nagut-a himself had a special present. It was a doll dressed in native clothes. At first the American refused to take it.

"Take it," insisted the Frenchman. "Otherwise you will hurt his feelings. It will remind you how brave you were in the face of danger."

Back in America, Frank made his report to his sister.

"I did my best to look for the material. Here is a native doll for little Elsie. Hope my niece likes it."

Mrs. Kempt reached for the doll. It dropped from her hand. There was a peculiar sound. Frank Moore picked up the doll and removed the outer wrappings. He held in his hand a metal tube. He pried the top off with a chisel. From the inside he took out several sheets of paper written in a familiar handwriting.

"You didn't fail," said his sister. "Here are all the notes my husband made."

A New Hobby Gives You A Brand New Interest!

Yes, anyone from 5 to 80 can draw or sketch or paint anything now... the very first time you use the "Magic Art Reproducer," like a professional artist—no matter how "hopeless" you think you are! An unlimited variety and amount of drawings can be made. Art is admired and respected by everyone. Most hobbies are expensive, but drawing costs very little, just some inexpensive paper, pencils, crayons, or paint. No costly upkeep, nothing to wear out, no parts to replace. It automatically reproduces anything you want to draw on any sheet of paper. Then easily and quickly follow the lines of the "picture image" with your pencil... and you have an accurate original drawing that anyone would think an artist had done. No guesswork, no judging sizes and shapes! Reproduces black and white and actual colors for paintings.

Also makes drawing larger or smaller as you wish.

Anyone can use it on any desk, table, board, etc.—indoors or outdoors! Light and compact to be taken wherever you wish. No other lessons or practice or talent needed! You'll be proud to frame your original drawings for a more distinctive touch to your home. Give them to friends as gifts that are "different," appreciated.

Have fun! Be popular! Everyone will ask you to draw them. You'll be in demand! After a short time, you may find you can draw well without the "Magic Art Reproducer" because you have developed a "knack" and feeling artists have—which may lead to a good paying art career.
